APPENDIX F – Hand Signals

Hand Signal Etiquette

When riding off-road, riders should be aware that there exists a series of hand signals that should be displayed when passing another group of riders. These hand signals indicate how many riders are following. If a rider is alone, the left hand is put up in a fist and the rider passes on the right. If riding in a group, the left hand's fingers indicate how many riders are following. For example, when riding in a group of five, the first rider should hold up four fingers; the second, three; the third, two; the fourth, one; and the last should hold up a fist. With a group of six or more riders, signaling will only be done with your left hand; never remove both hands from the handlebar at once, and use caution when riding one handed.
